FDA approved for bone growth

Dr. Blackman's amazing recovery

The FDA has approved PEMF devices for bone growth. Dr. Blackman's fractured arm is an example how 'high intensity' PEMF helped repair his arm in just 9 days (note European dates are day-month-year) to the point where there is no visible sign of any fracture remaining. Dr. Blackman is an owner of our PEMF Cellular Exercise system and practices in Amsterdam Netherlands.

Electromagnetic augmentation of antibiotic efficacy in infection of orthopaedic implants.

Pickering SA1, Bayston R, Scammell BE.

Infection of orthopaedic implants is a significant problem, with increased antibiotic resistance of adherent 'biofilm' bacteria causing difficulties in treatment. We have investigated the in vitro effect of a pulsed electromagnetic field (PEMF) on the efficacy of antibiotics in the treatment of infection of implants. Five-day biofilms of Staphylococcus epidermidis were grown on the tips of stainless-steel pegs. They were exposed for 12 hours to varying concentrations of gentamicin or vancomycin in microtitre trays at 37 degrees C and 5% CO₂. The test group were exposed to a PEMF. The control tray was not exposed to a PEMF.

After exposure to antibiotic the pegs were incubated overnight, before standard plating onto blood agar for colony counting. Exposure to a PEMF increased the effectiveness of gentamicin against the five-day biofilms of Staphylococcus epidermidis. In three of five experiments there was reduction of at least 50% in the minimum biofilm inhibitory concentration. In a fourth experiment there was a two-log difference in colony count at 160 mg/l of gentamicin.

Analysis of variance (ANOVA) confirmed an effect by a PEMF on the efficacy of gentamicin which was significant at $p < 0.05$. There was no significant effect with vancomycin.
